

PETE'S INVASION VISION

Pete's Invasion Vision

[Notes given September, 2003]

Introduction

God began to show Pete years ago when he was just a teenager that the Chinese would attack. He saw the battles and people being killed. He saw the populace fleeing for their lives from Portland and the major cities in Oregon through the mountains eastward. He saw significant battles take place that would give those fleeing more time to make it to safety. He saw that many would be killed on the way and that still others would just give up and die. He says that God asked him if he would be willing to show those in command the way that people would need to take to stay 'hidden' and eventually get to safety. The scenes of death and destruction bothered him so much that he began to drink to forget. In spite of this, he began to travel through the mountains of his native California, looking for the places that he had seen but to no avail. After a number of years, he felt led to move to Portland. It was there that he suddenly began to recognize the places that he had seen in his visions. Nonetheless, he still continued drinking to forget until he finally met Jesus and realized that God had an assignment for him and wanted to use him to save many lives. This is a short version of what he has seen and is missing many of the details that he has shared at various times.

Summary

In his vision, he saw the Chinese attack the West Coast of the United States. His vision covers mainly the events that occur in Oregon, including Portland. He has seen very little about what happens in other parts of the country. When the invasion of Oregon occurs, many thousands will flee from the Willamette Valley into Eastern Oregon. There will be numerous battles along the escape route, as the surviving military fights to hold back the enemy advance so that the people will be able to escape. Once people reach the relative safety of eastern Oregon, they will be organized into a hierarchical structure. Some of the refugees will make their way north into Washington into the area around Colville, which will be a 'safe zone'. At the end of seven years, the survivors will be able to drive the invaders out of the country.

Invasion

A disastrous event will occur in the eastern part of the United States that gives the Chinese courage to attack. Under the pretense of supplying aid, they will bring in thousands and thousands of troops in container ships. Some ships will dock at Astoria at the mouth the Columbia River. Other ships will proceed down the river to Portland dock there. Once the ships reach Portland they will begin the attack, both in Astoria and Portland. One of the ships that Pete has seen in the fleet of ships that come is an aircraft carrier. This carrier is very distinctive and has a 'ski jump' on the front.¹

¹ Recently, Pete was describing his vision to another friend of mine. This friend, from the time of his youth has studied war planes and ships of the various military of the world. He can tell you exactly how many and what type of ships the leading naval countries have. As Pete described the aircraft carrier, this friend exclaimed, 'The Chinese have no aircraft carrier!'. Pete insisted that he had seen a very odd looking aircraft carrier. Through research, this friend discovered that the aircraft carrier matching the description was purchased by the Chinese from the Russians and was to have become a floating hotel for tourists. The ship was in the process of being built by the Russians but was abandoned when the Soviet Union collapsed. The ship was completely finished but the entire military infrastructure of the ship was never completed. As of this writing (2009), the ship has been made seaworthy and has just started undergoing sea trials.

PETE'S INVASION VISION

Once the attack on Oregon begins, the Chinese will show no mercy and spare no one. They will shoot everyone they see. The populace will begin to flee for safety to the east.

From the Portland area, the escape route for those fleeing to safety will begin at Estacada and proceed first along the Clackamas River. At one point along Highway 224, at the point where the North Clackamas River meets the Clackamas River, there will be a delaying action by our artillery that keeps the enemy at bay for 2-3 days. This action will give the people a chance to escape up into the Cascade Mountains. Those manning the battery that provides this covering will do this at the sacrifice of their lives, as the time will come, when the invaders seek out an alternate route (a flanking maneuver) and attack the battery from a different side, destroying it and the men who man it.

Massacre

At some point on the west side of the Cascades, near Ollallie Butte, there will be a splitting of the group of refugees. One group will be a group of soldiers, who will know that they are a diversion intended to make the enemy think that the group is heading in a northerly direction. Those of a "contrary" spirit will choose (demand) to go with them, thinking in their natural minds that this is the 'safe' route. They will be found by the enemy and wiped out. The soldiers' sacrifice will allow the main group time to escape further through the mountains, as the enemy will think that they have destroyed most of the refugees.

PETE'S INVASION VISION

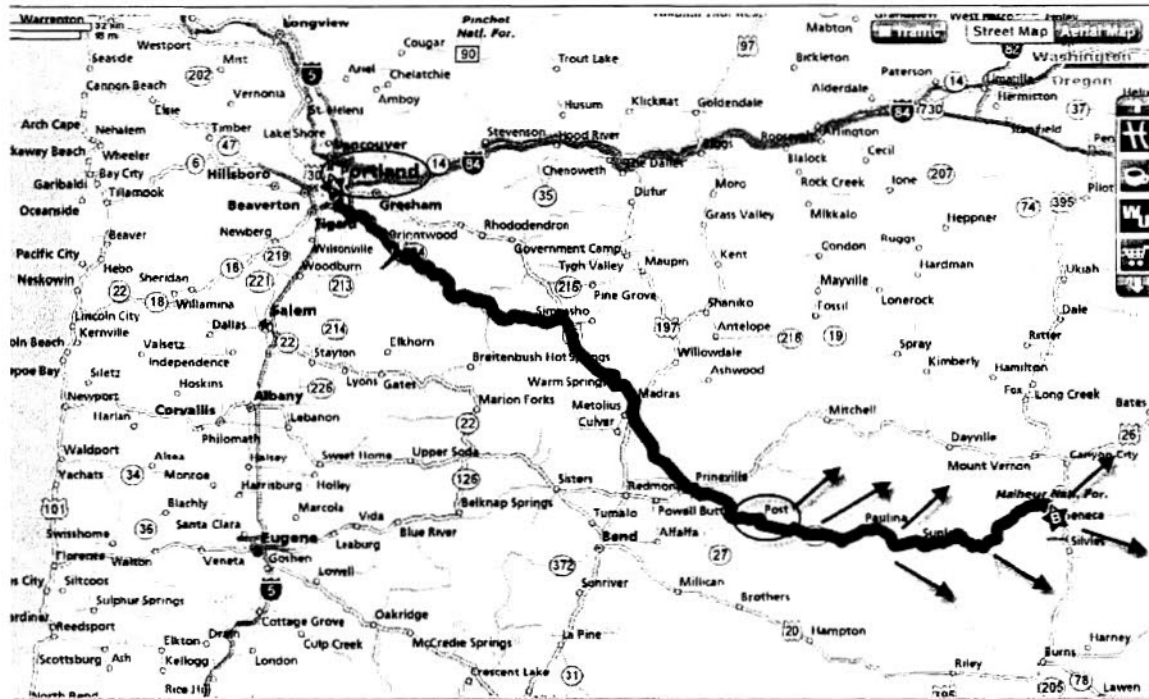

The escape route will only be along the highway in the beginning. At Detroit, another major battle will take place, as the military once again attempts to delay the advancing enemy. Once the people reach Detroit, they will leave the highway and begin to march through the mountains. From this point on, they will follow rivers and avoid roads in order to escape detection.

In the mountains, the people will begin to cross over the Cascades in the vicinity of Ollallie Butte and Mt. Washington and eventually meet up with Highway 22, which leads to the area in central Oregon near Bend. From there, they will proceed into central and eastern Oregon via a series of rivers, passing in the vicinity of Prineville, Post and Paulina as they continue towards eastern Oregon. Once the refugees reach Post, there will be decisions made about which groups will go to where. Once the people have reached Post, the greatest danger of attack from behind will cease but the enemy will pick up the pursuit again once the Willamette Valley and the I-5 corridor has been secured. After leaving Post, small groups will begin to break off from the main group and begin to spread out into the hills away from the road. This will continue until everyone has reached their final destination.

Even though the people will have reached the relative safety of this area, the Chinese will send patrols into the area and there will be occasional confrontations in which people will be killed. People will farm on the edge of the forested areas where there is water but will plant crops in such a way as to not be easily seen. Life will be very hard but people will re-learn the value of family and relationships. At the beginning, there will be more harassment from the invaders but this will diminish over time as they begin to experience their own problems. For those Chinese brought into the Willamette Valley as farmers, etc., life will also be very hard, as there will be floods and other natural disasters cause problems. Finally, about seven years after the invasion, Mt. Hood will erupt, blocking the Columbia River and causing great devastation. At this point, the people of Oregon will begin to retake the land and drive the Chinese out. The Chinese will leave many behind. It will be important for the returning survivors to treat those foreigners left behind by the Chinese with kindness and not to seek revenge.

Gott und die Vertriebenen

Pete has also seen some things about the time of the exile. Those who have fled will be divided into 12 main groups (tribes), that will be further subdivided into clans and so on until "families" of no more than 13 people. The 12 main groups (tribes) will be divided according to relationship and 'bent' (religious affiliation, nationality, etc.). Seven of the tribes will be composed of those who don't know much about God. The other five will be made up of people that have a firm concept of who God is. Of these five, there will be one that is assigned to evangelize among the other groups. Even though the sins of the people have caused this calamity, God, even in this time of dire need, still wants to reach everyone with the good news of His love.
